From the Unicinati Commercial, Dec. 8.

The pensive public is aware that the official relations between the Postmaster of Covington, Mr. Jesse R. Grant, and the special agent in charge, Mr. Shad. Easton, have not been the most agreeable for some months past. These ancient worthies, indeed, have come to entertain a very contemptible opinion of each other. Mr. Grant pronounces Mr. Easton to be a consummate hypocrite and an incompetent, and Mr. Easton represents Mr. Grant to be insane and incapacitated. Mr. Paston has had the advantage of several hearings in the newspapers. It is but fair that Mr. Grant should also be heard. We are not able to give his statement with literal accuracy as it was made to us verbally by the venerable father of the President. The paralysis with which he was stricken some months ago interferes sadly with the fluency of his delivery, and he searches around for words, and drops and catches the thread of his narrative in a way that is confusing to a reporter. But this is the substance of the interview with Mr. Grant:

"I will state in the first place, then," said Mr. Grant, alluding to his illness, "that Mr. Foulds, the postmaster of this city, and Mr. Easton called at my house to render me any service they could in my difficulty, for I was confined to my room for four months, nearly, not quite. It was some time about the middle of January last when they visited me. They did not come together, but at different times. It was about the time the Commercial had made some remark about the Fost Office being more expensive than that of Phinadelphia. Your tincinnati Collector of Internal Revenue, what's his name?"

A LITTLE FINANCIAL QUESTION.

"Yes, Mr. Pullan and Mr. Easton called at my house, and said that they had noticed the remark in the Commercial, and the question now was: How are we to dispose of that matter?"

[The reporter presumes this refers to the payment, by the department, of the salary of an extra postmaster during Mr. Grant's confinement.]

ment, by the department, of the salary of an extra postmaster during Mr. Grant's confinement.!

"'Why, said I,' continued Mr. Grant,' that could be easily done. Whatever the department allows Mr. Easton for his services, take that out of my pay."

"Well, with that Mr. Easton turned round and said: 'If Mr. Grant says that is to be the understanding. I will take and be satisfied with one-half of that amount, the remainder to go to Mr. Grant."

"Upon that the agreement was made and the matter put in the newspapers to know we were not going to take Philadelphia prices for our services.

"HAT THEY MEANT TO DO.

"Pretty soon after that. Derhaps three weeks after. Easton came to me and said: 'Mr. G ant, it's true I did make the agreement as published in the newspapers, but that's none of your business; we are going to do what we can for ourselves.' He seemed to be dissatisfied with the terms of his own proposition.

"Said I: 'Well, Mr. Easton, I'll not insist on your giving me one-half of your allowance, or any part of it, be it more or less,' for I did not know how much it vould be.

"To carry out this agreement in good faith on my part, I handed over to Easton on the list of each month, for three consecutive months, the sum of $100. If any arrangement had been made in the department, I did not know it. Whatever the allowance might be it should come through me, that the amount advanced to Easton by myself might be deducted therefrom and whatever was due him in excess of the $100 per month be handed over to him, and the 1 counts thus closed up and kept square.

"Just at the close of the third month, however, Easton informed, me with an all-sufficient air, that the department had furnished him the money for his own services.

DOESN'T WART THE MONEY.

"Well,' said I, in reply: 'I am very sorry that money for his own services.

DOESN'T WANT THE MONEY.

""Well, 'said I, in reply: 'I am very sorry that this should have been done: but if it be so you may hand over to my wrife the $100 which I have advanced you, but I want it to be understood that I want no part of the money until I am fully competent to take charge of the office. I want nothing which is not justly due to me.

"Mr. Easton reviled that the country was greatly indebted to my son for his services, and all it has done or is likely to do for him and myself would not be in excess of its obligations. He seemed to think that it was an entirely proper thing that I should receive my whole salary, though temporarily incapacitated for duty, and that the salary of a deputy ought to be paid by the department without my deduction from it, and he added: 'You needn't consider, Mr. Grant, that you are going to make the department wealthy by dividing your salary with me. You needn't take any trouble on yourself, for Mr. Foulds and myself will get the money ready for you, and you can do as you please and go where you please in the mean time.'

"I replied to this that I did not agree with him, and could not consent to such an arrangement. As for what my son had done for the country, let him reap the reward of his services: for myself I wanted nothing but what was justly due to me.

"Ever since that conversation, and my refusal to come into his locue views of doing what we could for ourselves. Easton has been constantly abusing me in every way that could be invented. He has repeatedly written or caused to be written, for he can't write himself, that I was insane and incompetent to the duties of the office, and this representation he has made to everybody he could get te tails to him about it here.

THE PATHER'S SERVICES.

THE PAYMER'S SERVICES.

"Now I have attended to the duties of the office every day since the 3d of April last, except the time occupied in two short trips to Georgetown, Ohio. I have attended to all the important business, and aff that Easton has done, or is capable of doing, is to distribute a few letters in the boxes. He has filled out a few blanks under my direction, but that is all. When any one comes in, upon whom he undertakes to walt, he flutters around like a wet hen, and fusses and fumbles among the letters till a young clerk steps up and relieves him. It is because I do not give him esadit for more than he does, or is competent te do, that makes him so dissatisfied. The long and the short of it is that he is of no use to me in the office. The work is mostly done by my clarks, and well done. If Easton, who is not worth a cent to the office, were out, and a little more pay allowed the clerks, Ishould not object were the extra sum taken out of my salary to pay them. Easton gets $130 a month, and has received $1.300 for the ten months he has been acting in the Fost Office; but I would not give fifty cents for all he has done.

CONCRALMENT. THE PATRICES SERVICES.

"He has kept everything concealed from me personally, and when he gets a communication from the department instead of showing it to me, he goes right over to Cincinnati and gives it to Master Benny, his son; he is the real Postmaster and the master spirit. Why, Easton can't write. I suspect it is Benny who is in correspondence with the department at Washington, and does the corresponding."

"Well, Mr. Grant, how did the difficulty with Shad, on Saturday have its origin?"

"Well, Saturday was pay day, and I directed the clerk to put up the money, for I am not able to handle it, owing to the partial paralysis of my hand, and put them on my desk. While he was doing so, I went in and informed Easton what instructions I had given, and that I would attend to the payments." CONCEALMENT.

"What did Easton say to that. Mr. Grant?"

"He wouldn't say a single word to me, but he told the clerk that he'd hold him responsible for every dollar of the money he handed to the old man. The clerk did up the packages as directed, and said to me, 'Here it is,' but I replied I wouldn't fight for it; if Mr. Easton considered it so important he could pay it out himself. Upon this Easton, who was mad, put me out of the office. I was not in a condition, you see, to help myself. After that he went away, and he has not been back since. It will not be wholesome for him to come either, as I intend to take charge of its affairs and control the office while I remain the Postmaster of Covington."

"Have you any further statement to make, Mr. Grant?"

"No, not a present. Easton is a consummate."

"Have you any further statement to make, and Grant?"
"No, not a present. Easton is a consummate hypocrite—that's the word I was trying to think of—and wante to be Postmaster himself."
With this remark the interview closed, the old gentleman saying as he retired that all he wanted was a fair statement of the case, which we have endeavored to give.

In Chinatown there is a Diana game, which is liberally patronized by the Celestials. We do not know enough of the game to give a description of its intricacies, but can state that a man who happens to bet on the card about to be turned wins forty for one. There is a Chinaman who happens to bet on the card about to be turned wins forty for one. There is a Chinaman who happens to bet on the card about to be turned wins forty for one. There is a Chinaman who happens to bet on the card about to be turned wins forty for one. There is a Chinaman with dread by the owner of it. Within the last ten days he has won over $1.600, and his luck or prescience, whatever it be, seems never to desert him. Night before last the Chinaman packed off over $400 which he had won from the game. The proprietor says this Chinaman comes in every evening, and will stand aloof from all others for a space of five minutes or so, when he will walk up to the table and bet, say, on the nine of diamonds, and on the square surrounding that card, and also on the three other nines. The deal goes on and up comes the nine of diamonds. On that card the winner is paid forty for one; on the square he gets two for one, and on each of the other nines he receives ten for one. This was the first bet made by the Chinaman on Tuesday evening.

After receiving his winnings he retired to one side and communed with himself for the space of five or six minutes, when he again approached the table and bet his money on the eight of hearts, and in the square and on all the other eight spots. The next card turned was the identical eight of hearts, making him a winner as before. On his money being counted out, he recounts it, piece by piece, with the utmost coolness, and again steps to one side. After the isual larse of time he again approached the table, this time betting on the deuce of clubs, which wh

A New Sort of Sanday Service.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

The Rev. Frederick Silver of the Church of England was some twenty years ago preaching in a parish in Shropshire, which was noted for drunkenness and vice. Having some wealth at command, he determined on making a bold stroke for reform. He found Sunday the worst day in the week, and decided that he must bring what forces he could to bear on that day. Some of his fock suggested prayer meetings, and other religious exercises, for the undermining of Satan and his power. But Mr. Silver took another tack. For ma., y weeks peculiar looking boxes and cases were daily landed at his door, exciting the curiosity of the neighbors. Finally, one bright morning, the people of that vicinity found the walls and trees all about placarded with the announcement that Mr. Silver would come a muse im to the public the next Sunday .ternoon. This set many good parsons and deacons to groaning. The roughs brightened up and crowded to hear Mr. Silver preach the next Sunday morning, when he related how he tho; in the had found the need of the town. In the afternoon they all crowded to the museum. A hundred fine paintings were displayed; a model of the Alhambra in Spain; specimens of cocoons at work, and the 136 colors which silk can take; a fine model of an elephant from a palace in Delhi; cases of English coins from William the Conqueror to Victoria; antique watches and iewelry; autographs of great men; ornithological collections, including Australian specimens; different costumes, boots and shoes, nets, implements, weapons, etc., from New Zealand, Madagasear, North America, Africa, China, and different costumes, boots and shoes, nets, implements, weapons, etc., from New Zealand, Madagascar, North America, Africa, China, and India.

Mr. Silver's catalogue showed his devotion to his project. He must have exhausted his own means, and levied contributions on other sources. The thing has been going on now for over fiteen years; and the result is, that that "law-less parish" is now one of the happiest communities in England. Every seat in Mr. Silver's church is occupied; the cottages in the place are so large and handsome that travellers ask, "Where do the laborers live in this village?" A school has risen, a new medical dispensary and a library. The rector has had a larger church built to hold his increasing flock.
